DEATH.

May 4, 1867, at Burlington, Iowa, of consumption, Joseph Emmons Briggs. Funeral from the residence of his mother at Dighton, Mass., May 12.

The only Class meeting of the year was held at the Parker House, May 13, to consider the death of J. E. Briggs. E. S. Drone, J. D. Williams, and Moorfield Story were appointed a committee, and drew up the following resolutions: —

Whereas, it has been God's will to take from us our classmate, Joseph Emmons Briggs; therefore —

Resolved, That we have lost one whose estimable qualities made for him friends wherever he made acquaintances; who, by his honest purpose, his pure character, his frank and genial disposition, won, while in College, the confidence of his instructors, and the affection and esteem of his fellow-students; whose industrious habits, unquestioned talents, and zeal in his profession, gave promise of a useful future.

Resolved, That, as a Class, we tender our sympathy to his afflicted mother and relatives, assuring them, that, while they mourn for a loved son and brother, we lament the loss of an esteemed classmate; and while it is their consolation, it is our pride, to remember that he lived and died a follower of Christ.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the daily papers, and a copy of them sent to the family of the deceased.

CLASS COMMITTEE.

CHARLES EDWIN STRATTON, Class Secretary.
JOHN DAVIS WILLIAMS.
JOHN MARSHALL WHITTEMORE, Jr.

The Secretary's address is 54 Devonshire Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON:
PRINTED BY JAMES F. CUTTER & CO.
No. 10 STATE STREET.

Classmates: —

The following pages contain a record of ourselves, our doings and sufferings, for the last four years. It is made up as usual, almost wholly from the materials you have given: if it does not prove as fascinating as a novel, I trust you will divide with me the responsibility.

Since my last Report, to our list of graduated members have been added the names of Arnold and Dwight. Two only of our number have died, Emery and Wilkinson, their deaths were within a week of each other and from the same unrelenting disease—consumption—the gaps they have left in the circles of their friends can never be filled.

The number of married men in the Class is increased from 37 in the last report to 63 in this: the number of bachelors is now that of the benedicts four years ago, and is to be reduced, I am credibly informed, still further to 38 on the day after Commencement. This wretched remnant still affect the highest spirits and amuse themselves by sending playful answers to the Secretary's inquiries as to "marriage" and "children." I have thought of publishing, instead of the usual list of marriages, a list of the unmarried, with an estimate of their qualifications, mental, moral and pecuniary, for entering into matrimony, and a concise statement of their real feelings and inclinations on the subject. It might be a real saving in the cost of printing the Report, and by many would be thought to serve them just right.

It is hardly necessary to say anything about our 98 children, the figures speak for themselves, and no doubt their parents will testify that the children do the same.

A word for our old friend the Class Fund will be found within, under that head.

To conclude, will you kindly notify me, (1.) of any errors or omissions in this or former Reports; (2.) of all changes in address: and believe me

Yours very truly,

CHARLES E. STRATTON.

The Secretary has received a letter of twelve pages from him, dated Calcutta, March 11, 1876, which want of space prevents printing in full. He went to San Francisco via Panama, thence to the Sandwich Islands, where he was received with great hospitalities and attention, thence to Japan, where "we find all the elements and variety of scenic beauty," thence to China, next to the Phillipine Islands, Singapore, Java, Siam, and Burmah. In this last country he saw a merchant who had made an Idol a present worth $150,000. This gentleman was tatooed from his waist to his knees, besides this, "his only clothing a narrow cloth about his loins." The women wore principally immense ear-rings and rings in their noses and toes; to this costume, shocking as it would appear at first sight, we are assured, "one soon becomes accustomed and reconciled."

He received the degree of M. D. from Harvard at Commencement, 1874. In March, 1874, he was chosen by the town of Concord one of the Committee of Arrangements for the Centennial Celebration of the Concord Fight, and was one of a committee of three to prepare a report of that celebration, which was published by the town, March, 1876. He wrote the part entitled "The Minute Man and the Bridge." He is a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, and also of the School Committee of Concord, and has served for one year as Superintendent of Schools. He was married at Concord, September 19, 1874, to Annie Shepard Keyes, daughter of Hon. John S. and Martha L. (Prescott) Keyes, of Concord. A son, William, was born July 11, 1875, and died July 15, 1875.

GEORGE FREDERIC EMERY, the son of George Freeman and Abbie Eliza (Appleton) Emery, was born at Paris, Me., April 29, 1845. Soon after his birth his parents removed to Portland, Me., where he attended various public schools, finally fitting himself for college at Phillips Exeter Academy. Both at school and at college, he was distinguished for his proficiency in the languages, and was always a favorite both with teachers and class-mates. At college he received parts at the Junior and Senior exhibitions, and at Commencement, and graduated the eleventh in scholarship in the class.

Soon after leaving Cambridge he went to New York city, and for a while was private tutor of one or two young men, but his ill health would not permit him to pursue that or any other vocation, and in 1867, by advice of his physician, he visited Great Britain. This trip proved beneficial and he returned to New York, but he was soon compelled to seek the more genial climate of Southern California. At San Gabriel, near Los Angeles, he with others, undertook to cultivate the mulberry, for silk purposes, and the raising of tropical fruits. This out-door life was of undoubted benefit: but his health was never sound from the time he left college. In 1870 he returned to San Francisco, and was engaged with a friend in the development of a coal property, and the management of an extensive ranch. These operations being suspended for a time, he devoted himself to the law, his father's profession, and made occasional contributions to the Overland Monthly and other publications. In 1872 he was admitted to the bar at San Francisco, but what constitution he had, was gradually wearing away and the last year of his life was spent in repose in the family of a friend, where all that tenderness and affection could bestow was constantly given to the last. He finally passed away December 20, 1873, having been compelled for years to fight continuously against disease which culminated in consumption, with no opportunity to give the world the benefit of his culture, or his friends the joy of success. His choice would have been to devote himself to literary pursuits, and, but for ill health and unforeseen mishaps, he would undoubtedly have made rapid progress in the path he had in view. His literary productions may be found in the Overland Monthly, under the titles "Centre Pole Bill," "Sevens," "Compasses," etc. He also contributed to Lippincott's Magazine an article giving some account of his rambles in England.

At a meeting of the Class held in the Class-room at Cambridge on Commencement Day, 1874, it was

*EDWARD TUCKERMAN WILKINSON, the son of Arthur and Martha (Turner) Wilkinson, was born at Boston, October 14, 1844.

His parents removed to Cambridge when he was about the age of ten years, and he was fitted for College at the Cambridge High School. His elder brother having died of consumption while a student at Harvard, Wilkinson, by his father's desire, did not enter College until a year after he was fully prepared for entering. At College he gave much of his time and attention to out-door exercises, especially to boating. He was in three crews that pulled at College regattas, at Worcester; namely, our Sophomore Class Crew that won the Sophomore race in 1864, the University Crew that was defeated in 1865, and our victorious University Crew of 1866, five of which, including stroke and bow, were from our class. After leaving College he travelled in Europe and in this country, but, with the exception of a few weeks in 1869 with Hurd & Houghton of the Riverside Press, Cambridge, he was never engaged in business. From early boyhood he was always very fond of the sea and of everything relating to it, having been much disappointed at his father's refusal to permit him to enter the navy, and a great part of his life after graduation he spent upon the water, rowing, yachting and canoeing. In the summer of 1872, in consequence of an unfortunate exposure to bad weather during one of his journeys, he caught a severe cold which settled upon his lungs, and he was never again a well man. He spent the following winter in the South, and in October, 1873, sailed for Europe, but though his friends felt for a long time very hopeful of his recovery, change of climate did not work any permanent improvement in his health. After spending two months in Europe he concluded to return home, and sailed from England for New York, with his cousin Dana Turner, on the steamship Cimbria. The voyage was a severe one, and he died during the passage, passing quietly away on the 27th day of December, 1873. His body was buried at sea, and now rests in the element which during his life he had loved so well.

At a meeting of the Class held at the class-room at Cambridge, on Commencement Day, 1874, it was Voted, That the Secretary be requested to convey to the mother and family of our deceased Class-mate, Edward Tuckerman Wilkinson, the sympathy of the Class in their bereavement.

*CHARLES FISKE, was born February 25, 1845, and died of consumption at Los Angeles, Cal., January 28, 1876.

He was the youngest of three sons of the late William Fiske, an early resident of Buffalo, N. Y. He left college during our Sophomore year on account of ill health, and afterwards spent several years in travelling; returning to Buffalo in 1868, with health somewhat improved, he became a reporter and correspondent of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, but in 1872, finding "the wear and tear of daily newspaper life" too severe, he went into business for a time, but again returned to journalism, and was connected successively with the Buffalo Express and New York Times, of which latter paper he was a reporter. Failing health again rendered necessary a change of climate, and he made a trip to Japan, acting at the same time as correspondent of the Times. The trip proved of little benefit, and he returned to the United States by way of San Francisco. Here he again went into business, from which, however, he was soon obliged to desist. He then went to Los Angeles, where in a short time he died.

The N. Y. Times, from which part of the above notice is taken, says "he was a faithful, active journalist," to which his class-mates could add, an amusing companion, and a warm and generous friend.

The above list shows that all but ten of the living graduates of the Class have contributed to the Class Fund. These contributions vary in amount from $2 to $100.

During the last four years, as will be seen by the statement below, deposits to the credit of the Class have been made in savings banks to the amount of $577.66. This sum is at present in the Suffolk Savings Bank, at Boston, and in April, 1876, amounted with accumulations of interest, to $635.91. The expenses of the Report and the supper will make a heavy inroad into this sum, and the Secretary would again ask all those who have not done their part towards the Fund to send it a contribution, and put an end once for all to the Secretary's begging.

On the next page is a condensed account of the cash received and paid out since the last Report.

We have examined the accounts of the Secretary for the last four years, and find the same properly vouched and accurately cast, and that the above is a true statement of the same condensed.

At a meeting of the Class, held at Cambridge, in the Class-room on Commencement Day, June 24, 1874, it was Voted, That the Class Fund when no longer used for Class purposes be given to the Harvard College Class Subscription Fund, unless the Class hereafter vote to give it to the College in some other form.

COLLEGE FUND.

This fund, more properly known as the Harvard College Class Subscription Fund, as will be remembered, was set on foot in 1869 for the purpose of providing the University with a fund the income of which could be used at the discretion of the University government for any purpose except the erection and repairs of buildings. By the terms of subscription it was to be held by Messrs. William Gray, A. A. Lawrence, and H. S. Russell, as Trustees, and, as often as it reached $50,000, was to be paid over to the Corporation; and $100,000 has thus been paid. Upon the payment of the last $50,000, which was on Commencement, 1874, it was determined in future to transfer the subscriptions to the College in sums of $20,000, and the Trustees now hold about $12,000 toward that sum.

Since this Class Subscription was opened, large benefactions have been made, from other sources, to the University. But they have for the most part been devoted to special objects, and the increased expenses, incident to the increased numbers and improved methods of the institution, have far outstripped these donations, so that there are still pressing needs to be supplied, and this fund is almost the only recent fund which is given with no restriction, except that its income shall be applied wherever the need is most pressing.

Our class has already contributed over $3,000 to this fund. The list of the contributors, however, numbers but thirty-six, and is as follows, (the contributions varying from $5 to $500): Arnold, Bangs, Bent, Blaikie, Blake, Brewer, Coppenhagen, Curtis, Danforth, Emerson, Farlow, Fenno, Flagg, Gray, E. D. Greenleaf, Hayes, Kettell, Longstreth, McBurney, Murdock, Peabody, Perkins, Perry, Putnam, Skillings, Storey, Stratton, Thorndike, Wheeler, Wilkinson, Williams, E. W, Wright, F. Wright, T. F. Wright, Smith, Ward, — 36.

Contributions, which may be made in yearly payments, are received by W. P. Blake, 37 Court Square, Boston, and by C. E. Stratton, 54 Devonshire Street, Boston.
